SCIENTIFIC DENTISTRY. Ninety-nine out of every hundred people neglect their teeth, partly because of the ex-pense attending good dental operations, partly because of the pain to some extent necessarily incurred, and partly because they fancy they have no time to spare, but too often because they fail to appreciate the life, but quite impossible for them to go into society without causing unpleasant remarks and exciting disgust. Many persons are scrupulously neat and nice about their per-sons and clothing, and are shocked at the slightest indication of untidiness, while leav-ing their teeth to the natural and rapid process of decay. Such people are like whited sepulchers.

When convinced of the absolute necessity of attending to the teeth, the next most im portant thing is to select a good operator— some dentist who is thoroughly imbued with the love of his profession; who is a careful and skillful workman, and who cares more for the character and durability of his gold fillings than for the gold fillings of his patients' pockets—a man who keeps pace with the improvements and discoveries in his profession, and who is not content to pursue old methods with easy complacency simply because some dentist had made a reputation upon similar work years ago—a man who will not slight an operation to save a little pain, though he may please his patient temporarily by so doing—in short, a skilled and conscientious operator and close

He has studied closely and thoroughly all that science has disclosed in regard to the structure and constitutional requirements of the teeth. Not content with knowing how to fill a cavity, he has ascertained the best means to prevent decay, and deserves more credit for the latter knowledge, since prevention is better than cure.

The Doctor's method of filling teeth is that which has been adopted by the most distinguished practitioners in this country, and the use of the mallet, of the rubberdam and of the small engine for facilitating excavations, not only enable him to make perfect and comparatively painless fillings, but permanent ones.

His prices are as low as good work can be Given back to God on the morning of the tenth of June, little Mann. May Parvenser, only child of Lucian and Iona Pritchett, aged 16 months and 21 days.

Sometimes, when God wants to keep lit tle feet from being bruised along the steep and rugged paths of life, and little hearts from being weary and heavy laden, He calls home a baby soul and hides it away in the bosom of Christ-for to be sacred from woe means to be sacred from earth.

But He who fashioned so lovingly the babies, knows best how dear they are to us -knows how truly they interpret Him and His Kingdom, and how radiant they make this earth of ours, and when He laid the burden of this pain on a father's and mothers' heart He pressed it down with a tender

He only wants to make Heaven so lovely and bright, that they will never, never lose their way to that dear home.

A baby's lisp, a baby's smile, a baby's kiss are worth all else the world can give-and this "sole daughter of a house and heart," was fashioned so daintily,-was so cunning ly versed in all the charming ways of baby hood-was so "fresh from the hand of God" but only interested. However his note is -had filled to such full measure two happy hearts. Alas ! when her beautiful brown been unjustly blamed.
